Improving access for Asian mental health consumers

A Responsive Mental Health & Addiction Service Model for Asian People
Collaboration between secondary, primary and NGO services

Dr Murray Patton: Chair of WDHB Asian Mental Health & Addiction Governance Group; Sue Lim: Project Lead: WDHB Asian Mental Health & Addiction Governance Group

Introduction

Waiomotata DHV caters for a culturally diverse population with the Asian population making up nearly one fifth of our total population.

A study has shown that there is low utilisation of our Mental Health services by the Asian population, and presentations to these services are mostly for acute situations.

The reasons identified for underutilisation of Mental Health services were: fear of stigmatisation, lack of language proficiency, inadequate knowledge of available services, cultural differences in assessment and treatment of mental health (between NZ and countries of origin), and delays in contact.

From a consumer: [Asian Mental Health Service Consumer Satisfaction Survey 2014]

It is very easy to access to the service whenever I need support, advice or information. The staff treated me with dignity and respect.

What we set out to do

To develop a five-year action plan for Asian responsiveness to address our growing Asian population and the inequalities impacting on access and quality of care as part of the Waitemata DHB Mental Health & Addiction Service Development Plan (2010-2013).

The main aims of our plan are for our:

Workforce to have the ability and confidence to work cross-culturally to better serve our Asian population.

Services to be integrated, culturally responsive and appropriate to respond to the diverse nature of the Asian population.

Asian Communities to have confidence in Waitemata DHB mental health and addiction services.

From a Learner: [Mental Health Careng with an Asian client]

‘I was able to apply the skills in your course and the results were amazing, clients were calm and their response was with interest. Thank you for this helpful course.’
